As almost exclusively revealed in BBC Scotlandshire, Prime Minister David Cameronian has announced a national commemoration to mark the 100th anniversary of the start of WW1 in 1914.

A series of Union flag waving events designed to bring the whole united British nation better together, it will dominate BBC coverage throughout the summer and autumn of 2014. Nicholas Witchell is already planning a documentary special about how marvellously not-really-German-at-all King George V was.

In a foretaste of how BBC Scotlandshire will be ramming this patriotic commemoration of all things red white and blue down your throats for months, you're getting another article about it right after the last one. Only people who hate our troops and want the Taliban to win could possibly object.
