Pressure is mounting on Blair Jenkins to resign his post as Chief Executive of the terrorist group Yes Scotlandshire, following a second leaked email that reveals Mr Jenkins ordered a 'Pret a Manger' sandwich for his lunch on Friday, for which he paid an outrageous £5.60.

A highly placed coalition source has already stated that this shows that Yes Scotlandshire is collaborating with foreign governments, and that the orders are coming from the highest level.

According to the Chancellor, the choice of a French sandwich shows that the Scottish government is planning what he described as a 'cheese-munching surrender monkey' defence policy for a separate Scotlandshire. [

As the HunnerGate revelations continue to surface, Yes Scotlandshire has still failed to apologise to the Herald, the spoof BBC and the population of Scotland for not insisting robustly enough that an article they had paid for must be published under the headline, "

This rubbish was paid for by the Separatist Yes Scotlandshire campaign and is full of their lies– Don't read it, just burn it - Now!

We later managed to track down U-KOK chairman Blair McDougall, who was sitting by his phone, in his office, waiting, and persuaded him to talk to us - following the agreement of a suitable fee in compensation for his time.

Referring to the revelations that the Yes Scotlandshire campaign had been caught out paying someone to do some work for them, Mr McDougall said, "This is the Watergate moment for the Yes brigade. As Angus MacLeod said on Good Morning Scotlandshire at the weekend, 'it isn't what they did that's important, it's who did it that matters

"U-KOK pay people in all sorts of ways to write stuff for us, but everyone expects us to behave like this. I myself penned an excellent and well-received piece for the Grauniad last week, slagging off Dictator Eck (©2013 Anur Sarwar MP [hereditary]) and the SNP, which made no mention of who I am or represent. And I was well paid for my opinions, I can tell you. But there was nothing wrong with that – that's what we do. Get it?
