This week we are proud to present the secret diaries of acting MP for Orkney & Shetland Alistair Carmichael.

It has been a tough week for the recently retired Scottish Secretary and we at the State broadcaster would like to show our support for this honest politician by sharing his innermost thoughts with an eager nation.

We are unable to bring you Mhairi Black's diaries this week as she is on study leave for her final politics exam.

There is also the small matter of the D notice that was placed on her Twitter feed last week.

Saturday

Bloody Shetland News found out that Tavish knew about Nickygate near enough straight from the get go. Feeling a lot better that I'm not going to be the only one with their arse out the window.

Couldn't sneak into the constituency office for the 50 protestors outside. I understand Johann's bunker is still empty. Might check flights to Glasgow if they don't go away soon.

Had a call from Nick to say the Natz have taken over our old office block in Westminster and kicked us into the corridor. I really need to find a new place to hide before I can risk going down there again.

Sunday

Have silenced a load of Nationalist protesters outside the Cathedral. Must admit the number of Nat thugs is making me concerned for my personal safety. Bet the First Minister is behind all this.

There's quite a few grannies in the mob, most of whom I phoned last year to tell them their pensions would stop if they voted Yes. I'm starting to think that was unwise – some of them look angry and quite tough. Help me Rona!

Monday

Paddington sent up a few boxes of documents. He says it's called Operation Diagon-Ally as I need to make them disappear.

Got in some special cleaners from the branch to help with the shredding. Feeling more relaxed by the document.

Had another call from Nick. He tells me to hold fast because the LibDem MP's Christmas dinner is already booked and they don't do refunds for such a small party.

Now Nicola's demanding my resignation. What did I ever do to her?

Tuesday

Noticed this sign on my way to work. How did the damn Natz know I was skiving from Westminster this week. Took inspiration from the words deerness and hope. Glad to see such a show of support for me staying on. Still feeling resolute as the last Lib Dem voice in Scotlandshire.

Sir Malcolm went on the radio to put a lid on things. He tried to use the old 'they're all lying bastards' defence. Thanks a fking million, pal. Talk about giving me the Malky!

Some local Nat up here has started a crowdfunder to get me kicked out. I doubt it will raise more than a tenner, but it still smarts.

Wednesday

Tavish says he's not angry with me, just very disappointed. Who does he think he is, my fucking dad? Told him he'll never get into Valhalla with such a defeatist attitude.

Just tweeted that this unpleasantness will soon blow over. That ought to put a stop to it Paddington called to see how operation Diagon-Ally was getting on. I told him I had kept a few pages back from the shredders as I'm not feeling all the 'protection' I was promised. He seemed a little worried.

Thursday

Note to self: Never, ever pose for a photo squatting on a pier in shorts holding up a big white card. That's just asking for all kinds of Photoshop related Cybernat abuse. (see image above)

Lots of Cybernat loons on Twitter going on about me paying the costs for the £1.4m enquiry. Clueless bastards!

The Cabinet Secretary already knew it was me as it was his office who sent me the memo to leak in the first place.

The 'enquiry' consisted of not dropping me in it until after the election. Didn't cost a penny.

Saturday

Asked Kezia if she could get her Dad to back off. Not a good sign when Jeff Dugdale is out to get you. Feeling a wee bit down but I'll bounce back after a wee Malt.

Checked on the Nats' legal challenge crowd funder . They're still struggling to raise the sort of cash they'll need to challenge an Imperial Master such as myself. In good spirits, or maybe that's just the Malt I've been sinking.
